A MESSAGE FROM THE CHIEF JUDGE OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

As you embark on civil litigation in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California—whether as a party to a lawsuit or as an attorney—I encourage you to familiarize yourself with the range of services provided by the court’s magistrate judges and especially to consider consenting to have a magistrate judge handle all aspects of your case, up to and including dispositive motions, jury or court trial and the entry of judgment.

The Northern District was one of the first federal trial courts in the country to assign a wide range of civil cases directly to magistrate judges upon filing. As a consequence, the magistrate judges have direct experience with nearly all types of civil matters filed in our court. Because our court is very busy, agreeing to proceed before a magistrate judge often means that the case will be resolved more quickly than if the case remained before a district judge. If the case must be tried, your trial date will be more certain and less likely to be continued to accommodate a felony jury trial. While consent is customarily given soon after a case is filed, parties may consent to have a magistrate judge preside over their case at any point in the proceedings.

Every magistrate judge in the Northern District underwent a highly competitive selection process and had years of experience before being appointed to the bench.

As the biographies that follow demonstrate, each is active in law school teaching and continuing legal education for attorneys. Many have been appointed to important committees within the circuit and national governing bodies and all are active in local court governance.

Each has been appointed based on detailed, confidential feedback from the bar and the community; each is equipped to handle the full range of issues presented to our court. Combined, the Northern District’s magistrate judges bring thousands of hours of federal judicial experience to their work at our court.

Phyllis J. Hamilton
Chief Judge

HOW CONSENT JURISDICTION WORKS

Under a law passed by Congress in 1976, the parties in a civil action in federal district court have the option of consenting to have the case handled by a United States magistrate judge. Magistrate judges are appointed by the district judges of each district court following a competitive merit selection process and serve for terms of eight years. Magistrate judges may be reappointed only after a rigorous review of their work that includes community input. In contrast, district judges are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate and serve without term limits.

With the exception of certain types of cases (including capital habeas corpus cases, securities class actions and bankruptcy appeals), when a civil action is filed in the Northern District of California, it is randomly assigned to either a district judge or a magistrate judge. For every case assigned to a magistrate judge, all parties (that is, all plaintiffs and all defendants) are asked to consent to have the case handled by a magistrate judge all the way through trial. The parties are encouraged to make a decision regarding magistrate judge jurisdiction as soon as possible and no later than the first case management conference (about 100 days after the case is filed). If any party does not consent, the case is reassigned to a district judge.

If all parties consent to magistrate judge jurisdiction, then the assigned magistrate judge presides over all aspects of the case and any appeals from magistrate judges' rulings are made directly to the Court of Appeals, as are rulings by district judges.

Sometimes cases initially assigned to district judges are reassigned to magistrate judges because all parties consent to magistrate judge jurisdiction. The district judge may invite the parties at the initial case management conference to consider consenting to the jurisdiction of a magistrate judge, and the parties may take that opportunity to do so.

The magistrate judges of the Northern District of California handle hundreds of civil cases every year. Each magistrate judge has an assigned courtroom and dedicated staff, including a courtroom deputy and law clerks. Because of their diverse professional experiences before and during their service as judges, this court's magistrate judges are well-qualified to preside over all types of civil litigation.

POTENTIAL BENEFITS OF CONSENTING TO A MAGISTRATE JUDGE

When parties consent to have their case tried before a magistrate judge, they receive a date certain for trial. Because district judges must give priority to holding trials in felony criminal matters, district judges must frequently postpone scheduled civil trials. Because magistrate judges do not preside over felony criminal matters, they need not move their trial dates to accommodate criminal trials. This is one of the advantages of having a case handled by a magistrate judge rather than a district judge. In fact, the court's magistrate judges nearly always meet their scheduled trial dates.

Also, civil cases assigned to magistrate judges generally move along at a quicker pace. Because magistrate judges' trial dockets are generally less crowded than those of district court judges, magistrate judges are often able to schedule trial within one year of the filing of the complaint.
